5th Community Social Pediatrics Symposium: Children's Vulnerability – Understanding and Addressing Health Inequities

May 25 & 26

The Community Social Pediatrics Symposium is a Fondation du Dr Julien initiative that is part of a collective effort to build on what we have learned from practice. It is a biannual event bringing together practitioners, scientists, academics, researchers and political decision-makers who wish to influence the ways in which we can help children at risk.

This year, the Symposium will focus on the many faces of vulnerability and will encourage discussions on various action plans. Indeed, society, the law and legislation, communities and families represent as many different realities as there are solutions. What does society think about vulnerable children? How do human rights and public policy help to reduce inequality in healthcare? Where are vulnerable communities located and how can we take into account their unique characteristics for optimal intervention? What frameworks and processes can we establish to ensure the long-term viability of our approach? What are the interventions that are adapted to at-risk communities and how can we measure their impact? Here are just some of the questions that will be raised during the 5th Symposium.

CRCF members Franco Carnevale, Delphine Collin-Vézina, Tonino Esposito and Catherine Roy will be presenting. Click here for more information.

Job/Scholarship/Funding Opportunities

Valerie Rosser, MSW student, looking for RA position

I am a McGill University student, who has just successfully completed the Qualifying Year into the Masters of Social Work program (which I will be pursuing in September). My five years of experience in the field of Nutritional Science have provided me with the opportunity to enhance my research, reviewing, and editing skills. For example, I helped to develop peer-reviewed practice points for the Practice Based Evidence in Nutrition (PEN) website, and I served as a freelance scientific fact/citation checker for NutritionFacts.org during the pre-publishing stage of a book by Dr. Michael Greger. In the course of my recent academic pursuit of social work and related disciplines, I have gained practical experience in social science research methodology through the completion of research papers, a literature review, a research proposal, and a comprehensive qualitative interview (including transcription). As a very detail-oriented, conscientious, and highly motivated individual, who has successfully used her organizational, writing, and mathematical skills in the management of a home-based business, I am also very well-suited to undertake administrative work of all types. Click here to see Valerie's CV.
