PROFESSOR IN THE FIELD OF INTERNATIONAL HEALTH

Offer number
2794

Posting period
From 17-01-2018 to 23-03-2018

Workplace
Faculty of medicine, Department of Social and Preventive Medicine

General Information
The Department of Social and Preventive Medicine invites applications for a tenure track open rank position in international health. Departmental responsibilities include teaching in the global health profile in the medicine program, the Masters of Public Health concentration in global health, and the Master and Doctoral programs in epidemiology. These programs welcome many students interested in international health.

Planning for a Global Health Faculty Succession is a priority of the Global Health Policy Framework Action Plan adopted in 2015 by the Faculty of Medicine. This priority is embodied, in particular, in the creation of a professorship in international health to consolidate international health expertise for training and research at the faculty.

Job Description
A full-time SPUL\(^1\) position in the Department of Social and Preventive Medicine. Rank, salary and benefits will be determined based on the training and experience of the candidate, in accordance with the conditions in the applicable collective agreement. This is a full-time professorship, about 50% of which will have to be dedicated to research. Faculty responsibilities include supervising graduate students and teaching in the training programs to which the department contributes.

Summary of the functions
The professor will develop relevant courses in international health in the three levels of study in the medicine, public health and epidemiology programs.
The professor will be invited to develop and implement an international health research program. He or she will be eligible to apply for a Career Investigator Award and research grants from the granting agencies.
The professor will develop professional cooperation within the Department of Social and Preventive Medicine, the Faculty of Medicine, and Laval University.
