Sandy Summers is founder and executive director of The Truth About Nursing and co-author of Saving Lives: Why the Media's Portrayal of Nursing Puts Us All at Risk. Since 2001 she has led the effort to change how the world views nursing by challenging damaging media depictions of nurses. Ms. Summers has Masters Degrees in Nursing and Public Health from Johns Hopkins University and a Bachelor of Science in Nursing from Southern Connecticut State University.

Prior to her graduate work, Ms. Summers practiced nursing for 15 years in the emergency departments and intensive care units of some of America's major trauma centers. From 1994-97, Ms. Summers worked in Phnom Penh, Cambodia. She has also lived and worked in New Zealand and St. Thomas in the U.S. Virgin Islands.

THE FUTURE OF NURSING RESEARCH AND RESEARCHERS IN A CHANGING PROFESSION AND HEALTH CARE SYSTEM

After completing his doctoral degree in nursing from McGill University, Dr. Sean Clarke completed three years of postgraduate clinical and research training at the University of Pennsylvania. He joined the standing faculty at the University of Pennsylvania School of Nursing in 2001, and became the Associate Director of the Center for Health Outcomes and Policy Research at that time. Currently, Dr. Clarke holds the RBC Chair in Cardiovascular Nursing Research at the University of Toronto and the University Health Network in Toronto. In 2010, he became Deputy Director for the University of Toronto site of the Nursing Health Services

Research Unit funded by the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care. Dr. Clarke's research deals primarily with organizational aspects of acute care nursing (with a particular emphasis on staffing levels, work environment factors, patient outcomes and nurse occupational health) and nurse workforce issues. He has authored or co-authored over 80 articles, 15 book chapters and co-edited a volume on medication safety for nurses. A fellow of the American Academy of Nursing, he holds an adjunct appointment at the Université de Montréal and visiting appointments at University College Dublin and the University of Hong Kong.
