CURRENT RESEARCH PROJECTS

- 2007-present Archaeological and historical perspectives on the Kitan/Liao period (ca. 3rd -13th c.) in Chifeng, Inner Mongolia, China. Collaborative research with McGill University, University of Birmingham (UK), Inner Mongolia Archaeological Research Institute, and Jilin University. This project examines the Chifeng area during the 3rd -13th c. CE period from both local and regional perspectives to analyze the development and rise of the Kitans and the Liao Dynasty. Funding is being sought to expand the project and conduct intensive and extensive pedestrian survey and geophysical survey in the Chifeng region.
- 2005-present Chengdu Plain Archaeological Survey Project, Sichuan China. Collaborative research with McGill University, Washington University in St. Louis, Harvard, National Taiwan University, Peking University, Chengdu City Institute of Archaeology. This project is investigating the trajectory of sociopolitical developments and human-environment relationships in the Chengdu region through settlement pattern survey and environmental and landscape analyses. It is collecting data from the earliest habitations on the plain in the Neolithic through the Han Dynasty period.
- 2005-present “The nation on display: cultural heritage interpretation in China’s peripheries and the creation of new national identity narratives.” Book project. Historical and archaeological site and museum visits, interviews with cultural workers, and literature review are providing the foundation from which to study the uses of archaeology and cultural heritage in Xinjiang, Inner Mongolia and other border regions within the context of China’s national patriotic education project and the perceived need to provide a coherent national narrative to achieve its State goals.
