Commitment to practice 30-45 minutes/day, 6 days/week, at home, different mindful techniques learned in class. Mindfulness-Based Stress Reduction is a training method using mindfulness to cultivate awareness. It is compatible with all belief systems. It is a way of calming mind and body to become more open to the direct experience of life through the simple act of paying attention moment to moment with kindness and with intention and with cultivating a non-judgmental awareness in day-to-day life.

This program is modeled after the University of Massachusetts Medical School Mindfulness-Based Stress Reduction Program. It has been developed by Jon Kabat-Zinn, PhD, and has been offered in many different countries, for over 25 years, to all types of people including Health Care Professionals.

Why do this? Mindfulness techniques help us discover and observe our inner reactions to life' stressors, and to choose how to respond to them instead of being in a reactive mode. What is often commented from participants, is a feeling of calmness, better concentration and focus, a feeling of well-being, les reactivity to events, less anxiety, better sleep, decrease negative thinking and increase compassion for oneself and for others. Sometimes participants will remark on improvement of their physical health.

What we do in MBSR

Participants will learn mindful breathing, communication, walking, eating, as well as body movements. Awareness of thoughts, emotions and physical sensations will be explored. Participants will also practice self -inquiry and group discussion will be encouraged. Participants commit to practicing mindful techniques learned in the group 30-45 minutes /day, 6 days/week.

Who can benefit from this? Everybody. All professionals, students, doctors, psychologist, OT, nurses, librarians etc. We all deals with stresses from within and from outside. We are stressed by time and obligations. And we are also pressed by shoulds, needs and expectations. How can we better be present to live our lives at home and at work and perhaps decide to look at things differently and make changes if we desire, or decide to simply live our life as it is. It become a new way of being.
