The Canadian Mineral Industry Education Foundation has been offering scholarships since 1964 to undergraduate students with a strong interest in a career in the mining industry. The scholarships are available to students attending any university in Canada and following a program in geology, mining or metallurgy, or any other discipline related to the mining industry.

The scholarships are normally awarded to those entering the second year of a university program but first-year students have also been selected for the awards. Once selected the successful recipients receive $1,000 per academic term until the degree program is completed, provided that satisfactory academic performance is maintained and that work experience in the mining industry is obtained between academic terms with reports to be submitted following each work term.

In addition the John Steers Bursary of $1,000 for one year is available for award to a geology student with a particular interest in mineral exploration.

The mining sector is truly a global industry and Canada is a leader. The industry is open to people, in Canada and elsewhere, ready to deliver to market demand and global economic growth. In a constantly changing world, the mining sector demonstrates its innovative approach and needs solid succession. The Foundation is here to support tomorrow's leaders.

The Canadian Mineral Industry Education Foundation currently has about 120 students receiving scholarships at universities across Canada. Financial support for the Foundation comes from those Canadian mining companies and individuals who want to ensure that university students are aware of and will be attracted to the possibilities for interesting and rewarding careers in the mining industry.
