Faculty Club Newsletter, October 2019 Edition

Fall is in the air! Students and professors can be seen strolling on campus carrying their books while sporting a coat with an occasional scarf. Birds head south for warmer climates while squirrels stock up on acorns for winter, which is just a few months away. Just before frost hits the Montreal region, trees flaunt their vibrant leaf colours, as if forests and parks were putting on a fashion show displaying a new fall collection.

While the routine seasonal changes occur, it's time to visit McGill University's Gault Nature Reserve. It's a place where 1000 hectares of natural primeval forests are protected along the St. Lawrence Valley. Located in Mont St-Hilaire just outside of Montreal, this picturesque landscape is ideal for discovering, teaching and researching nature. A 25-km public trail is open to visitors 365 days a year. For more information, please visit the following link: <http://www.mcgill.ca/gault/reserve>
