

Medical and Radiation Oncology Rotations

The resident with no previous training in either oncology or radiation oncology will spend one month each in medical oncology and radiation oncology rotations. These may be organized at either the Jewish General Hospital or the McGill University Health Center (Montreal General Hospital). The general goals of these rotations are to increase the resident's knowledge and skills regarding the care of cancer patients including the role of chemotherapy and radiation therapy for palliative patients, the management of common complications of cancer as well as complications from the treatments, and to increase the resident's understanding of cancer patients' experiences at various stages of disease.
