

WHY TAKE THIS COURSE?

This seminar-based course provides an introduction to cutting-edge issues in global primary care and health systems research through discussion and engagement with leading researchers and practitioners

WHAT WILL YOU LEARN?

- Introductory knowledge and practical tools to navigate global health research, with a focus on primary care and health systems research.
- Interrogate positionality, and the influence of coloniality on global health theory and practice
- Best practices in equitable partnerships, research, and stakeholder/community engagement

TEACHING METHODS:

Active learning will include interactions with experts, student-led critiques of selected readings, case studies, videos and podcasts, and participation in relevant McGill-wide seminars.

Required for the MSc Global Health Concentration in Family Medicine. It is open to MSc and PhD student across the University with the approval of course coordinators.

Email alayne.adams@mcgill.ca with any questions

