

PhD in Mental Health Student: 2024-2025

Project Overview: The overall focus of this 5 year pan-Canadian study, funded by the Canadian Institutes of Health Research (CHIR), is to adapt Walk the Talk toolkit for community organizations serving equity deserving populations. Walk the Talk toolkit is a free online bilingual toolkit launched in 2022. It is an implementation science strategy designed to help organizations participate in a process to implement mental health recovery guidelines into their services. The aim of this study is to adapt the toolkit for organizations serving equity deserving populations. There are 6 participating sites in 4 provinces. The study integrates mental health recovery, implementation science, adaptation, co-production and qualitative methods. The project's Principal Investigator is Prof. Myra Piat (<http://douglas.research.mcgill.ca/myra-piat>).

Description: We are seeking to integrate one Doctoral student into Dr Piat's pan-Canadian research team. The student's PhD thesis will be on a specific aspect of the larger research project. A student stipend is available. PhD students interested in mental health recovery, implementation science, qualitative research and co-production should apply.
