11. Rationale for new course

Geog 409 Geographies of Developing Asia will serve as a much needed complementary course alongside Geog 408 (Geography of Development) and Geog 410 (Geography of Underdevelopment) given both student demand at this level, and its greater peri-urban and urban focus (the other two courses have a rural focus). This course will appeal to students not only from Geography, but also from International Development Studies, the 'Environment and Development' domain within the School of the Environment, and East Asian Studies. As the Asian powerhouses of India and China take an increasingly centre stage in world debates, students will be better served to understand the current issues in such countries and their neighbours, by taking this course. This course draws on the Professor's first hand experience working throughout the region. When previously taught by the same Professor under the title of Geog408 before a teaching buy-out, this course reached its capacity and received very positive teaching evaluations.

12. Course Description (as it will appear in the Calendar [maximum 50 words]):
 (N.B. Faculty of Medicine must append complete course outline)

An investigation of current development questions that are of concern to the Asian region. Emphasis on critically studying the major processes of social, economic and environmental change through regional case studies in rural, peri-urban and urban contexts. Covers important debates and considerations that lie at the heart of development geography.
