Dr. Rishi Gupta

Rishi is a trainee respiratory physician and is currently completing a Doctoral Research Fellowship at UCL Institute for Global Health. His research seeks to refine the risk stratification of individuals being tested for latent TB infection for progression to TB disease, in order to better target preventative treatment towards those most likely to benefit. He uses a combination of epidemiological and 'omics approaches, including individual participant data meta-analysis, prognostic risk prediction and whole blood transcriptomics.

Precision targeting of preventative therapy for TB

Rishi will provide an overview of his Doctoral research and will outline future opportunities to extend this work in TB prevention.
